

A vast field of red poppies stretches to the horizon under a dramatic sunset sky. The sun is low on the horizon, casting a warm, golden glow over the scene. The sky is filled with dark, heavy clouds, some of which are illuminated by the setting sun, creating a mix of orange, yellow, and dark blue tones. The poppies are in full bloom, their bright red petals contrasting sharply with the green stems and the colorful sky.

100 years on
from the first Remembrance
Day

IN REMEMBRANCE OF THE DEAD.

Thousands of people gathered around the Cenotaph in Whitehall
in November 1919

Left - King George V unveiling the permanent Cenotaph in Whitehall on 11th November 1920

King George V - he wanted to have two minutes silence

Everything stops for the two minutes silence on Oxford Street on 11th
November
1919

Indian Sikh soldiers who fought in WW1 for Britain

Harry Patch (1898-2008) was the last surviving person to fight in WW1 from any country. He, and other elderly veterans, were partly responsible for a revival of interest in WW1 in the 1990s

The Queen laying a wreath at the Cenotaph in a recent memorial service